Wool levy payers don't want interference from government

The Federal Agriculture minister Tony Burke gave a very clear message to Australian Wool Innovation that they needed to get their house in order.

Mr Burke made it clear that unless AWI started sorting things out, the government would weigh in and do it for them.

Is that the solution though?

The South Australian Stud Merino Sheepbreeders Association don't agree.

President of the Association Frances Andrews says it is up levy payers to make sure AWI is performing not the government.
